Oral squamous cell carcinoma (OSCC) is the most common form of oral cancer. The identification of new biomarkers may help increase our knowledge of the molecular mechanisms of OSCC progression and allow the development of novel molecular target therapies. This study investigates the expression pattern of CXCKLF1 in OSCC and identifies a potential biomarker for OSCC. CXCKLF1 protein was examined by immunohistochemistry in 69 OSCC tissues, 19 oral dysplasia (OD) tissues and 40 nontumor oral mucosa tissues. The expression of CXCKLF1 was then evaluated in 24 cell lines. The expression levels of CXCKLF1 in saliva, plasma and tissue were also determined by immunohistochemistry, Western blotting and RT-PCR. The distribution and location of CXCKLF1 were mainly detected in the cell nucleus of oral epithelial cells. CXCKLF1 was overexpressed in 100% (69/69) of the OSCC tissues, whereas only 20% (4/19) of the OD tissues and 7.5% (3/40) of the nontumor tissues were CXCKLF1 positive. Moreover, CXCKLF1 was strongly correlated with lymph node metastasis. The expression of CXCKLF1 protein was correlated with the proliferating cell nuclear antigen protein expression. Moreover, CXCKLF1 was also significantly overexpressed in the plasma and saliva of OSCC patients. CXCKLF1 may be a potential biomarker in OSCC.Gene expression analysis of experimental candidiasis reveals a core set of genes and pathways which are modulated during infection. Candida albicans is an opportunistic fungal pathogen that is associated with disease in humans. C. albicans has the ability to switch between yeast and hyphal forms of growth that are critical in pathogenesis. In order to identify new genes and pathways modulated during infection we compared the mRNA expression profiles of C
