While you should consult with your doctor before making a choice, here are five things you should look for in a plan: » Benefits. Ask about prescription coverage, dental coverage and other services. Ask how well the plan handles any pre-existing conditions, such as a heart condition or diabetes. » Co-pays. When you visit the doctor, ask the insurer to confirm the copays. Make sure your copays are fair and will not exceed what you pay for a similar service in other parts of the country. » Deductibles. Again, ask how many times your copays will be deducted from the money your insurer pays you for covered services. A low deductible increases the risk that you will face costs before insurance pays its share, but a high deductible decreases the amount of money you will have to pay to an out-of-pocket maximum. » Network. You need to know which doctors and hospitals are in your network. Find out how many doctors and hospitals you are covered when you visit the doctor. » Price. Ask how much the plan costs. A better health insurance plan may cost more because it pays more than other plans in the insurance market, but it may also provide better coverage. You need to do your research. Be sure that you know what a plan covers. Your employer may offer a plan that is more expensive than one you get if you buy insurance on your own. You will probably have to pay a higher monthly premium, but the premium will come off your paycheck. And remember that your premiums could drop if your company offers health insurance as a benefit. The government requires employers to do this for most workers.package burp; /* * @(#)IntruderPretargeting.java * * Copyright PortSwigger Ltd.
