Widi Pro 4.1.A new investigative report into health care in America has found that the uninsured don't have less-effective care than other Americans. Instead, "the uninsured's care may be just as good as that of their insured peers," according to the "uninsured in America" report from the Commonwealth Fund. The report looked at data from a national survey of uninsured Americans and found that doctors and hospitals treat the uninsured and their insured peers "equally," with the exception of preventive care and mental health. "The uninsured, in fact, do just as well in terms of preventive and mental health care as insured patients, and are better than that of insured patients on both acute and specialty care," said Linda C. Schneider, executive director of the Commonwealth Fund, a nonpartisan research foundation that examines health care in the U.S. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox On average, the uninsured fare better than the insured on every type of health care except care related to "managing medications, changing an I.V., exercising, doing things like getting an X-ray and seeing a specialist," according to Schneider. More uninsured Americans report they have a
