Representing local landowners who are looking to get the property tax assessment on their land reduced or completely eliminated, Dan Shirey has more than 30 years of experience dealing with property tax assessments. An assessment of the property can be made on the property tax assessment records. This was recently put to use in the case of the Straz and Iron Diamond Mine. Previously, the company had an appraisal value of $27.6 million, while the county's figure was $33.2 million. According to a news release from County Executive Steve Cornwell, the new appraisal value was: Straz Mine: $33.2 million Iron Diamond Mine: $27.2 million The case was appealed on the basis that the county was not giving the property the proper value. In their lawsuit, Shirey explains the process of how property tax assessments are made: "County land-use administrators use data from property tax assessment records to determine an assessment value for each parcel of real property in the county. It is a process in which the county's assessed value is compared to the highest- and best-use of the property, the market value and the tax value." For the county to have reduced the value of the properties, the suit stated that the assessment office had to use evidence from the county's property tax assessment records, a number of years of weather information, and information from a property management company hired by the landowners, which had assessed the property at a lower amount. In the Straz case, the county had stipulated that the assessment office had made an assessment of $33.2 million, but the lawsuit maintained that the "assessed value... is at least $54 million." In addition to arguing that the assessment office had made an incorrect assessment, the landowners in the case asked the court to set aside the assessment and seek repayment of the taxes paid in the county's latest budget. The lawsuit was thrown out by Judge Thomas Moyer of the West Virginia Circuit Court on Sept. 15, 2016. Moyer's opinion

Mass panic incidents are common public health threats in developed nations in recent years. The aim of this study was to identify the level of risk of smoke inhalation illness in a group of people exposed to smoke during a mass panic event. A cross-sectional survey was administered to a convenience sample of people who took refuge during a mass panic event. A total of 102 of the 103 participants completed the survey (99%). Participants in this survey were more likely to have symptoms of smoke inhalation illness, including cough, dizziness, dizziness, and headache, when compared with a control group. With the exception of heartburn, no statistically significant association was found between the presence of a specific symptom and length of stay in the smoke ($r(2) = 0.13$ for cough). In multivariate analysis, persons with complaints of headache (odds ratio [OR], 4.8; 95% confidence interval [CI], 1.7-14) or dizziness (OR, 3.1; 95% CI, 1.2-8.0) were more likely to stay in the smoke longer than were persons without these complaints. Mass panic events pose a serious risk of smoke inhalation illness to the entire population involved. These events are likely to have long-lasting physical and psychological consequences, particularly for the subgroup of individuals at greatest risk of smoke inhalation illness. The state's anti-spam laws, Golan's defense attorneys told the jury, are so strict and severe that no one could possibly be prosecuted for spamming. Meanwhile, the prosecution's star witness, the FBI's Hogan, was recovering from the traumatic events of the previous day. Before he took the stand, Hogan's throat was swollen to twice the size of a normal man's. He couldn't talk. But by his third day on the stand, his throat had shrunk to normal size. The trial has taken longer than expected because Hogan's lawyers, Robert Ray and Tony Serra, and the prosecutors, Stuart Richman and Kevin James, have battled over everything from how to define spam to which parts of the law the jury should be 595f342e71
